- Addition to Key to Mr. Well

In Paragraph 3. of the Staff Study there is a statement which is apparently based on the concept that "national intelligence" and "intelligence relating to the national security" are synonymous. A careful study of the National Security Act of 1947 demonstrates that such is not the case. The phrase "intelligence relating to the national security", in the sense of the word "intelligence" in which it is normally used, applies to all activities of the Government which are generally considered to be intelligence activities. Unless an information-gathering activity in some way relates to the national security, it is not usually considered to be an "intelligence" activity. Intelligence relating to the national security includes national intelligence, but it also includes departmental intelligence.
